Union Pacific is a $9,000 part of steam evolution history and one of only three three-cylinder steam locomotives. ©2015 Ryan C Kunkle, licensed About.com, Inc. George Stephenson invented the steam locomotive, the predecessor of modern trains, in 1814. After 10 months of tinkering, Stephenson, who worked in coal mining, produced the first train, which he called, Blucher. Stephenson's track was only 450 feet long, but his engine carried eight loaded coal vans weighing 30 tons at about 4 mph. Since then, trains have been an integral part of the world and U.S. history, notes History.com: Trains have helped the North win the Civil War. The world's first travel agency is on the start thanks to the train journey. The railroad gave us standardized time zones. Miles of railroad tracks in the United States reached their peak in 1916 (nearly 400,000 miles). In 2014 it was still more than 160,000 miles from rail tracks in the U.S., with each mile generating more than $820,000 a year, according to Rail Serve.
